
O&O Software to help Schools worldwide

Berlin, 30.01.2009 – The Berlin-based software publisher O&O Software has begun to tackle general problems which many schools face when beginning this second scholastic semester: schools do not have access to new technology – and at the same time, the budget is limited, student numbers are ever on the increase, and there is just not enough time.

Endless discussions between the school administration and teachers have identified IT problems as being major ones facing schools. O&O Software is squarely addressing these issues by putting together two individual software packages: the O&O Classroom License and the O&O School License. Both include solutions to speed up older systems, schedule imaging of desktops and servers on a regular basis, and to securely erase personal and confidential data. Both packages are complemented by their ability to manage all imaging and higher performance solutions centrally from one location.

The O&O Classroom License and the O&O School License allow for the flexible setup of configurations for one or several computer rooms or even entire schools. Schools not only profit from an astounding price advantage when buying the O&O School License but also from the unlimited licensing of the programs. In addition, the O&O School License includes many solutions for repairing damaged Windows systems or rescuing data.

“We take the needs of schools very seriously, and are delighted to offer them software packages tailored specifically to their needs. We have received a lot of positive feedback about our packages - and that speaks for itself”, said Jim Harrison, Sales Director, International.

Interested schools can get more information about our software packages under www.oo-software.com/schoollicenses as well as from any O&O Authorized Partner and retail outlet.
