

Windows 10 cannot phone home anymore!

With the latest Windows 10, personal data from users are passed on to various apps and to Microsoft.

Berlin, August 19th, 2015 - O&O Software, data security and recovery specialist, has released the free program "O&O ShutUp10". Without having to carry out long searches or any research, users can close the various security and privacy gaps in Windows 10.

The problem

Keyboard entries are recorded, private data are sent to Microsoft and various applications. WLAN passwords no longer have to be entered as some services now share these with facebook contacts. Or the computer connects with a potentially unprotected public network - without asking permission. All these factors and more mean a user's daily computing experience with Windows 10 is very comfortable, but they also pose significant security risks. To counter these risks, users of Windows 10 have to deactivate the data sharing functions manually. Without expert knowledge, this can prove extremely difficult as some of the settings are very well hid within the system.

The solution

The new freeware O&O ShutUp10 enables users to see all Windows 10 security settings on one simple page and to deactivate those that share sensitive data which they are not comfortable with. The program provides tips and information so it is clear which functions can be safely deactivated and which not. Any changes made can be undone at any time with just one click of the mouse.
