

Share files outside the cloud using the free O&O FileDirect

O&O FileDirect makes it possible to share an unlimited number of files without having to load them in the cloud. This way your confidential files are never out of your hands. You maintain complete control over who gets to see them.

Berlin, July 12, 2017 – With O&O FileDirect, Berlin-based O&O Software introduces its free program for direct data transfer.

O&O FileDirect makes it easy for users to share files or folders with any number of recipients. The sender maintains absolute control over who should be allowed to access these files. Using O&O FileDirect means there's no need for any cloud services or worrying about the size of email attachments. The files will only be shared between the computer where the files are saved and the computer where the files will be downloaded. Download is also possible on a smartphone or tablet.

Downloading can be done with all current versions of Google Chrome and Mozilla Firefox. Microsoft Internet Explorer and Microsoft Edge are not currently supported because they both lack the necessary technology for data transfer. Downloading requires no installation of O&O FileDirect.

Data transfer with O&O FileDirect

Once O&O FileDirect is installed, files or folders of any size can be shared by drag and drop on the program window. O&O FileDirect automatically generates a link that, if wanted, can expire after a certain period of time or after a maximum number of downloads. It's also possible to require a password for protecting the download even further.

The recipient can then use this link for downloading whenever the computer where the data's located is in operation. Each download will be run directly from this computer using a point to point connection.
